McIver Named SHAC Interim Director

community," Holloway said. "Stephanie's commitment to equity, inclusion and affordability mirror the culture we're promoting at UNM, and I look forward to collaborating with her to advance the health and wellbeing of the Lobo community."

McIver has been the director of SHAC Counseling Services since 2012. Though she grew up in Albuquerque, her education and experience as a Clinical Psychologist began elsewhere. She is a graduate of Spelman College and the Ohio State University where she began her pre-doctoral training at the college counseling services. She held previous collegiate health positions at Santa Clara University and University of California at Santa Cruz and worked in Acute Psychiatry at Stanford Medical Center.

McIver will replace James Wilterding, who has also been at SHAC since 2012 and most recently has served in the role of executive director since 2019. read more

James Holloway, provost and executive vice president for academic affairs at the University of New Mexico has appointed Stephanie McIver as interim executive director of Student Health and Counseling (SHAC), effective April 1, 2022.

"I'm pleased to welcome Stephanie into her new role- she brings experience, vision and strategy that will be crucial in ensuring SHAC continues to provide high quality, relevant services to our students and campus
