

Bio:

Dr. Renée Delgado-Riley serves the University of Oregon as the Director of Student Life Assessment & Research. The bulk of her career in the field of Student Affairs has been as an Assessment & Research leader coordinating projects to understand early barriers impacting student success and the efficacy of interventions to better guide the field on best practices for working with students. Renée coordinates assessment and research projects to understand and address historic achievement gaps for traditionally marginalized students within the university utilizing multiple methodologies. Her motivation for this research emerging from her own challenges as a first-generation native New Mexican student.

In her non-academic life, she operates a small acreage farm with her family where they raise a variety of small livestock and a fruit orchard. An avid homesteader, Renée focuses on getting back to her ancestral roots and connecting with the land. She completed her doctorate at the University of New Mexico in Educational Psychology.
