

Janelle Torres-Groover, MPH, MSW, LCSW, is a proud native New Mexican, and dedicated public health and social work leader with over 20 years of experience serving individuals with disabilities, complex health needs, and those impacted by systemic inequities. She currently manages major Medicaid waiver and outreach programs at the University of New Mexico's Center for Development and Disability, where she leads strategic planning, workforce development, and community partnerships. Her career has spanned child protection, public health, and disability advocacy—with a strong focus on equity and culturally responsive care. Janelle is deeply committed to uplifting underserved communities across New Mexico and advancing inclusive, person-centered systems through collaboration and innovation.