

Stephanie D. McIver, Ph.D., is the Executive Director of Student Health and Counseling at UNM. A Clinical Psychologist and practicing mental health provider for 30 years, she has been the Director of Counseling Services at the University of New Mexico's Student Health and Counseling Center since 2012, on the Board of Directors of the Association for University and College Counseling Center Directors, and on the clinical staffs at Stanford University Acute Psychiatry, Santa Clara University (also an adjunct professor), and University of California at Santa Cruz. Dr. McIver grew up here in Albuquerque but left 2 weeks after graduating from Highland High School for an HBCU experience at Spelman College in Atlanta, Georgia. She went on to The Ohio State University for her Masters and Doctorate degrees in Clinical Psychology. Upon her return to NM in 2007 she worked in private practice and as a Military Family Life Consultant providing psychological services to military service members and their families. In 2014 she founded and directed the New Mexico Black Mental Health Coalition, stepping down in January 2022. She specializes in Mood and Anxiety Disorders, especially Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), Women's issues, and multi-cultural/identity issues. The mother of two adult children transitioning from home, she spends her time with her parents, sister, cousin and her circle of women friends, and has now been neglecting her fur-babies, her reading, and her gardening due to a new love, and, as always, is trying to wean from social media.
